Clydebank Housing Association again achieves Investors in Young People Accreditation

Local housing landlord Clydebank Housing Association (CHA), has again achieved the prestigious Investors in Young People Gold Accreditation (IIYP), the only people management standard that focuses on an employer's recruitment and retention of young people. This award represents a true commitment to the training and development of young people and demonstrates Clydebank Housing Association as an employer of choice for young people and testament to their effective practices around youth employment.

Commenting on the award, Sharon Keenan, Chief Executive of CHA said, "The assessor indicated that we met all of the key indicators and more, not only evidenced by the number of young people who have joined the organisation and continue to be given the opportunity and support to develop but also through our commitment to young people through our wider activities at Centre81 and work experience opportunities."

Mary Leishman, the assessor from Investors in Young People, stated that CHA could be classified as "outstanding".

Notes to Editor: CHA has been established in Clydebank for over 35 years and currently employs over 30 staff, 12 of whom have been employed and developed as a young person. CHA has also held the Investors in People accreditation longer than any other Scottish Housing Association.
